

Abstract

SLÁMA, Michal. Total Socio-tolerant Drugs in the Youth – Social and Societal Implications. [Thesis] / Michal Sláma – Prague: Charles University, Hussite Theological Faculty, Department of Psychosocial science and Ethics. 2018. p. 129. Advisor of thesis: PhDr. Monika Nová, Ph.D. – Degree of professional qualification: Magister. – Praha: HTF, 2018. 128 p.

The thesis is divided into a theoretical and a practical part. The topic of the diploma thesis is all-society tolerated drugs and their impact on youth – social and societal implications. In the theoretical basis of the thesis, we focus on the definition of the concepts of the all-society tolerated drugs and its division, the use of drugs, the emergence of addiction and the treatment of an addiction. We identify the concept of the socio-economic and social impacts of drug use among youth, as a consequence of their consequences for the somatic health and the social environment of man. The implications and consequences of the use of all-human drugs in youth are also addressed in the empirical part of the thesis. In order to meet the objectives and tasks of the research, the quantitative research method is used in the practical part of the thesis, using the information obtained from anonymous respondents who were young people within a defined geographic location within twenty-one years of age. We also deal with preventive measures on the part of the social worker, which we interpret in the framework of the recommendations for practice.