

Abstract

The bachelor thesis "The Prophetic Phenomenon and Women in the Old Testament" represents prophecy as a phenomenon, with its characteristics typical of the biblical environment. Its three parts are descriptive. The work looks and describes the prophetic phenomenon as it appears in the writings of the Old Testament. As a context, it is necessary in the introduction to make a preview of the prophecy in its development in the environment that formed Israel. Part of this introduction will be a look at the woman through the eyes of the Old Testament. Individual prophecies will be described in a section that will focus on the prophecy in the broader sense, that is, in the way that the texts themselves allow. For comparison, prophetic and secular religious systems will be mentioned in the surrounding peoples. Three women were selected for work: Mirjam, Debora and Chulda. The last part of the thesis will be devoted to the conclusion that summarizes the knowledge gained during the work. The passages of the Holy Scripture according to the Ecumenical Edition will be used in the text.

Keywords

prophecy; woman; religion; oracle; magic