

Abstract

The thesis presents different pathologies sharing a common symptom of a painful groin. Being a very difficult problem to diagnose, it reaches almost into all medical specialties. The first part of the thesis outlines anatomy and kinesiology of the groin, explains different tests and diagnostic thinking and lists all main diagnosis with groin pain based on a thorough literature review. Therapy is included in each diagnosis description as well as imagining. The second part contains three case studies to demonstrate the variety of possible etiologies.