

Abstract

Resources: This diploma thesis deals with the anti-toxicological Protective Treatment implemented within the conditions of the execution of the imprisonment test, namely within the Specialized Section for the Protective Treatment of Rýnovice Prison. The study is composed of the qualitative research that describes one specific section in detail. It consists of analysis of documents, observations and case studies of clients.

Objectives: The aim of the thesis is to describe the implementation of Protective Treatment in prison and to map connections between this institute and proposal of measures leading to its improvement. Thesis also pursues to find out whether the convicts involved in Protective Treatment do actually take part in the process.

Sample: The research sample consists of one specialized section of Protective Treatment, implemented by the Prison Service of Czech Republic.

Methods: Used research methods comprise the analysis of the documents for the activities of the section and for the implementation of the Protective Treatment by the Prison Service of Czech Republic, further observations and two case reports of clients that acted as an issue demonstration. Case studies use an analysis of available documentation, including psychiatric reports, expertises, and individual psychotherapy with clients.

Results: Protective Treatment is an institute that has great demands on the knowledge of the issue in the broad context of legal, health and specific environment of prison. The problematic point is the actual limitlessness of Protective Treatment within our legislation, as well as Treatment procedures without professional standard. The specialized section of Protective Treatment of Rýnovice Prison has structured program, in which clients can participate according to their possibilities, and from the evaluation of case reports this Protective Treatment can be considered as meaningful.

Conclusions: Results of the work cannot be generalized, but they can serve as the means for familiarization with the implementation of Protective Treatment within the Prison Service of Czech Republic, results also can lead to reflection on ordered and executed Protective Treatment, over the institute itself. At the same time they partly introduce duties of the addictologist in prison.

Keywords:

Protective Treatment - addiction - drugs - execution of imprisonment – prison