

The title of this bachelor thesis is „The relation to the possessions in the New Testament“. The main purpose of this thesis is to identify various aspects of the view at the wealth and the poverty in texts of the New Testament, to make a judgement about these texts on the background of its historical and literary context and to look for its common topics. In this thesis we went into details about relatively great number of passages with the goal to attain the global point of view. At the beginning we outlined briefly „the history of poverty“ in the nation of Israel and some points of historical context. The biggest space was given to the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, Paul’s letters and James. At the end we made an attempt to resume briefly what the New Testament says about the wealth and the poverty. We joined the short mention about the pontificate of Pope Francis, his opinions of the wealth and we mentioned his two documents, too. At the very end of the thesis we joined short personal conclusion.
