

Abstract

The bachelor thesis deals with demands on social work in a selected facility which provides social activation services for homeless people, as well as the possibilities of support for social workers. The thesis consists theoretical and practical part. The theoretical part deals with the demands of social work in general. The demands of social work were derived from various sources, such as the definition of social work, the legislation, the ethical codes of social workers and the monograph on social work. The practical part deals with specific activities in the selected facility and the demands emerging through work with a target group of homeless people. There are examples from field work added in the thesis for greater clarity. The last part of the thesis consists of opportunities for support of a social worker who deals with demands specified above. Support options include supervision, intervision, employee training and teamwork.
