

Summary

The bachelor thesis deals primarily with the possibilities of support that can be used by families in the capital city of Prague who have a close person imprisoned. It outlines the conditions of custody and imprisonment in the Czech Republic and introduces negative effects which families who have a close person imprisoned may face. Subsequently, the bachelor thesis deals with the possibilities of supporting these families in the Czech environment in terms of social policy and social services, psychotherapy and self-help groups.

The practical part maps the provided social services in the capital city of Prague, focusing on the usability of families with a sentenced person in prison and the possibilities of the Association of Civic Counseling Centers. Furthermore, the thesis introduces selected non-governmental organizations with a target group of clients' families with a sentenced person in prison and informs about the contributory organization of the capital city of Prague, Center of Social Services Prague and its detached workplace Re-socialization and Reintegration Programs.
