Summary

This thesis deals with the genesis of evil according to Teilhard de Chardin and his view on the issue of the interpretation of original sin in the sense of evolutionary development as he was led by his natural science and theological knowledge. The work is divided into three chapters. The first chapter contains a biography of Teilhard de Chardin. The second chapter is devoted to evil and its logical development consistent with natural laws. To understand his thought processes, basic concepts and relationships connected to the evolutionary process are clarified in this chapter, as well as concepts and relationships introduced by Teilhard de Chardin. The third chapter explains Teilhard's interpretation of original sin from the view of original sin on the axis of the evolutionary development of evil. The second and the third chapter also introduce the official point of view of the Roman Catholic Church on the topic. This clarifies the differences between Teilhard's theory and the official viewpoint of the Roman Catholic Church and the consequent conflicts with representatives of the Church.
