

Transcultural nursing is becoming a commonly used concept. More frequently than ever healthcare professionals have to provide care to members of different ethnic groups. Specific approach different from one used for members of major society is necessary. Lifestyle, folk traditions, ways of good health maintaining and experiences with hospitalization of Roma in selected parts of the Czech Republic is studied by the means of qualitative research. Possible contribution of the research for healthcare practice is discussed at the end of the work.