

This master's thesis is concerned with free time activities of children and youth, with a special emphasis on open clubs as the NGOs offering a "new" social service and providing a convenient place for children living on housing estates. It also outlines trends in organizing free time activities and introduces a particular open club. Considering the research carried out among children, it proposes some ideas on further functioning of this organization.