

The aim of the dissertation was to contribute to the understanding of genetic influences that contribute to obesity in childhood. The specific objective was to monitor the cohort of Czech children with early-caused obesity prevalence of mutations of selected genes, which are applied in the pathogenesis of monogenic forms of obesity.