

Growth of the postmodern spirituality is caused by the transformation of our society from modern to postmodern one or from industrial to information type that has begun in the middle of the 20th century and continues to the present. These social changes affect not only churches, but also for majority of human beings the relationship to God. Postmodern man/woman does not like archaic traditional forms of the spirituality; he/she tries to live his/her relationship to God in individual specific form, sometimes completely modified according to their visions. It causes the spiritual deregulation, which is the typical phenomenon of present time. Many new movements in church based on postmodern principles try to satisfy the spiritual needs of today's men/women, for whom are the old church institutions functionless. In my opinion, this trend will continue in future in this direction. The growing of new movements and the decay of the old institutions is easily noticeable already today. The main characteristics of postmodern spirituality are for example the charismatism, emphasis on personal relationships, evangelicalism, spontaneous missionary activities and the new forms of ecumenism.
