

Adolescent drug abuse is a negative phenomenon, thesis aims for selected aspects of work with adolescent psychoactive substances users in Czech republic. Objective is to describe specifics of addictology programmes for adolescents and participation of state administration offices, also provide the list of facilities providing this type of care. Besides the literature, this thesis draws from personal experience of the author, who has been working with adolescent drug users. Institutional case study of addictology programme in context of institutional care is also part of the thesis. In conclusion is model of principles of the therapeutic community suitable for use in terms of institutional care. Case management principles are useful due to the problem complexity.