

As a theme of my bachelor's work, I chose "Basal stimulation" applied on a patient on unit of intensive care. It's a concept targeted a client's basic needs and his sensual perception. Whole text is divided on several parts. Clinical part, which says something about history, concept, and important characters of basal stimulation, and the concept itself, about human's perception. Further more, it says something about different methods, which are separated on basic and advanced elements. Most of them are accompanied with pictures and photos. Second part of my work is about caretaking problems. It also describes three types of clients with completely different health status. These are clients with Coma Vigille, unstable clients with Guillan-Barré, and an aggressive client. I pay attention to describe casuistry of each of these klient groups, describing several methods which I applied during a certain portion of time. In the end, I summarize the effects of Basal stimulation on a specific client. I paid a special attention to a third part, which contains an additional information. It contains basics of communication with blind, demented, or deaf clients, photos of "unit of intensive care", from a point of view of a client who is permanently laid up to the acute care bed, or a biographic answer sheet, which I edited to fulfill the needs of my ward and my work. The ultimate goal of my work is to create a guide, which will serve not only to the clients themselves, but also their relatives. They will find basic information about a Basal stimulation, basic methods, and a possibility of cooperation among a caretaking personal.
