

The alternatives to unconditional sentence of imprisonment

Abstract

This thesis focuses on the alternatives to unconditional sentence of imprisonment. The introductory part includes chapters dealing with the concept of punishment, the concept of restorative justice and the activities of the Probation and Mediation Service. Furthermore, there are separate chapters in this part, which deal with the system of alternative measures, alternative sanctions, the development of alternative measures in legislation. In relation to the purpose of the work is mentioned briefly the issue of unconditional sentence of imprisonment.

The main part of the thesis deals with selected alternative sanctions, namely conditional sentence, conditional sentence with supervision, house arrest, a sentence of community service, financial penalty and prohibition to enter the sport, cultural and other social events. The individual chapters deal in more detail with a specific alternative sanction in terms of its legal regulation and subsequent execution and implementation in practice. Both the advantages and disadvantages they face are discussed in detail and de lege ferenda addressed.
