

Abstract

The Moral Crime and its Prevention

The submitted thesis deals with the topic of moral criminality and the options of its prevention. The main goal of this thesis is to give a deeper overview of this topic, the current legislative with an emphasis on sexual offences, its victims and the processes of victimization. The thesis is divided into five chapters, of which the first four are dealing with related topics on theoretical level, the last chapter deals with particular moral offences.

In the first chapters the attention is paid to the concept of human sexuality, human sexual instinct and the variability of tolerated manifestations of sexuality in society and the reflection of human sexuality in the concept of morality. Subsequently, moral crime is defined, individual moral offences are listed, and the division of these offences according to various criteria is provided.

Considerable space is provided to the topic of offenders and especially the victims of moral crime, both in criminal and criminological optics. In the case of offenders the division in to deviant and non-deviant offenders is given. In the case of victims of moral crime a legal definition is provided as well as the victimological concept. The attention of the thesis is focused especially on the issue of victimization and secondary victimization and its individual mechanisms.

Individual chapter deals with the issue of moral crime prevention. Definition of crime prevention as such is given and a classification according to different content is presented. The thesis also offers individual options of prevention of moral crime with regard to criminologically different offences that belongs into this category, as well as from the position of potential victims and offenders.

The last chapter deals with two representative moral offences, namely the offence of rape and sexual abuse, their current legislation, myths and prejudices associated with them and the possibilities of their prevention.

Keywords: moral crime, prevention, rape, sexual abuse, offender, victim, victimization