

Recidivism in the Czech Republic is one of the highest in the European Union. According to the representatives of the prison service, justice and non-profit organizations, a certain solution is the systematic support of persons released from imprisonment (hereinafter referred to as "VTOS") in their integration into society and active work with individuals in VTOS.

The aim of the diploma thesis is to find examples of "good practice" from already implemented, in the conditions of the Czech Republic, an innovative project for the treatment of convicts in OV. The emphasis here is mainly on the analysis of the application of professional treatment methods in OV, the composition of sub-activities of OV treatment programs according to individual phases, setting the goals of treatment programs in relation to creating optimal conditions for, if possible, a successful reintegration process. At the same time, in this thesis, I will compare the treatment programs and the way they are implemented in the department with a medium level of security with the treatment programs and their implementation in the facility "Open Prison"
