Course of defence: The student started her defence by describing the case that she studied. She defined the case of Georgia in detail together with its relation to the theory of liberalism. Later, she presented the research questions and the preliminary assumption with which she worked. From a methodology point of view, she employed a mixed methodology - interviews, discourse analysis, and qualitative case study. Finally, she presented the results of her research. Following the presentation, the committee read the reviews and asked the student to respond. Specifically, the reviewer asked the student to explain the concept of a shadow economy. The student answered the question.
