

Summary

The bachelor thesis with the title The Comprehensive approach to psychosocial rehabilitation CARE in the Practice of the Community Team of an Organisation Working with People with Mental Illness deals with the topic of evaluation of the CARE model tools from the perspective of the Community team workers. The aim is to identify, in the given scope, the benefits and weaknesses of the selected tools (Personal profile, Personal plan and Early warning signs plan – Semaphore) of the CARE model in working with clients with serious mental illness and to offer recommendations to improve their use. The theoretical part of the thesis, in three chapters, defines psychosocial rehabilitation, its goals and principles. It defines basic contextual concepts such as serious mental illness and introduces the CARE model including theoretical background, basic vision and principles with their implication into practical working methods and selected tools. It sets the frame of meaning into Community team practice in the light of the ongoing mental health care reform. The empirical part of the thesis, included in the chapter four, analyses and interprets interviews with eight social workers on the benefits and weaknesses of the selected tools and then offers recommendations for improving their use.
