

In my diploma work I tried to value transplant in a Christian (religious) point of view. My essay (diploma work) is divided into two parts – medical part, in which I have written about individual steps made before the exact transplant and I also explained what are the benefits and negatives of transplant. In the first part I also included law issues of transplant in Czech legislation, about the difficulty to donate the organ, perhaps the risk of the individual donors. I described the criteria of death from medical and ethical point of view. In a second part (theological) I have written about the value of the transplant from the ethical point of view, the religious side (reflection) it means till when the human being is still considered as a person whose dignity has to be (needs to be) respected and whether the human autonomy is the ethical password. From the religious point of view (side) does not exist objection against voluntary transplant donors. Donor transplant is morally accepted with agreement of the donors themselves and without excessive (enormous) risks included. The purpose of the death of the individual is diagnosed (found out) first before the transplant can be donated. The possibility of the donation (transplant) abuse is the organs selling market. In the Christian way the life is the body itself of the creator (God) which the human being can't abuse when he wants to but which should be considered and offered with love to the closest person (human being). It does not exclude of damages of the expenses for the donation of the organs or the tissues, but the profit is banned. Nobody has got the right to have anyone's organs, the donation of organs is high moral act of human solidarity.
