This bachelor thesis deals with the search for sources of curvature of spacetime in general theory of relativity. In particular, it seeks to find a source of curvature that can be confidently said to be composed of a perfect fluid and an electromagnetic field. The problem of finding such physical solutions is first summarized in the first two chapters. Then, for specific spacetimes, it is already trying to find exact solutions that would correspond to such a source.