

Abstract (in English):

This thesis focuses on researching the role and form of propaganda in Japan from 1941 to 1945. The focus is on the mass media used to spread propaganda. The goal is to provide a comprehensive view of Japanese wartime propaganda and how it was used to control and influence the population. The analysis of propaganda is conducted in the context of historical events and focuses on the influence of nationalism and pan-Asianism on the form of propaganda and its reflection in the media, both in Japan and on occupied territories.
