The aim of this final work is to map the view of the period media on the Allied air raids of 1945, carried out by Soviet and American bombers on the territory of the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia and then to compel its transformation into socialist and post-socialist era. The work consists of 7 chapters in total, with the first devoted to the premise for the emergence of ideological-information warfare in subsequent periods, the seventh dedicated to summarizing the findings on the case of Hrotovice. The other 5 chapters then analyze the content of the articles and their interpretation during the socialist era in Czechoslovakia and the post-socialist era in the Czech Republic.
