

This thesis examines two types of forms of imperfect verbs which are used in the czech language to express the future. It is an analytical form and form with a formative prefix. The thesis first introduces the reader to the basic issues of the topic and then also to the current findings in this area. In the next part is examined the occurrence of the mentioned forms in the vocabulary of the czech language. The aim of this thesis is to fill the gaps in the previous mentions of the issue with the help of aformentioned research.