Abstract: This bachelor thesis deals with the introduction of two algorithms, namely LSQR and CGLS, and then their comparison in the field of theory and the field of practical application and computation. First, it is important to lay the foundations for these algorithms by using conjugate gradients and Lanczos tridiagonalisation. Both algorithms are theoretically equivalent, but in practice it is necessary to distinguish between them which is more appropriate for a given calculation.