

Abstract

The primary purpose of the bachelor's thesis is not to point out the issue of discrimination against Roma in the area of Prague-Žižkov, a place often labeled as an excluded locality, but it is an attempt to explain why it is possible to have a certain adequacy of the reason given by property owners for not providing rent to Roma groups. This quest for explanation takes place through the search for answers to questions in contexts. Considering that the issue is examined for the period from 1989 to the present, it is necessary to focus not only on certain discrimination but also on whatever reason it is difficult for the Roma population to obtain a lease in the given locality, taking into account the changes that took place in 1989 within our society. In the end, the tools used by the institutions to solve this problem in Prague-Žižkov are pointed out, they appear to be possibly effective based on the data found.
