

Merging of state contributory organisations and organizational units in the competence of the Ministry of Health of the Czech Republic

Abstract

The thesis focuses on the consolidation of state contributory organizations and organizational units of the state within the scope of the Ministry of Health of the Czech Republic. The initial stage involved mapping all relevant state contributory organizations, organizational units, and state enterprises, which fall under the jurisdiction of the Ministry. Subsequently, state contributory organizations suitable for consolidation, such as the University Hospital Brno, St. Anne's University Hospital Brno, and Centre of Cardiovascular and Transplantation Surgery, were identified. The thesis is divided into five chapters covering topics including organizational units, state contributory organizations, state enterprises, specific state contributory organizations providing healthcare services, and the possibilities of merging these entities. The fifth chapter describes the possibilities of merging the identified entities, with the author attempting to offer solutions for potential consolidation. However, the legislator, through the amendment of the Property Act adopted shortly before the finalization of the text, has facilitated the entire process of consolidating state contributory organizations. While acknowledging the limited impact of individual initiative, the author believes that their contribution to debates with stakeholders in the healthcare sector played a role in contributing to the successful adoption of the aforementioned amendment of the Property Act.
