

The submitted diploma thesis deals with the issues of organic farming, its progress, the current situation and the legislature. In addition, the thesis describes the conversion process of conventional farms to organic farming. Further, the thesis presents the farmers' attitude towards organic farming based on the empirical field research, which was carried out on the territory of the Protected Landscape Area Blaník. The conclusion of this work offers a concept of arrangements, which can be used by the management of the Protected Landscape Area Blaník to motivate local farmers for conversion to the system of organic farming.
