

Abstract:

The goal of the bachelor's thesis is to describe the current state of robotization in public libraries. The first part of the work defines the categories of robots that are currently part of the processes in libraries. These categories are reflected using specific examples from practice. The second part of the thesis outlines the anticipated impacts of robotization with regard to librarians as employees. The conclusion of the thesis assesses the findings on the influence of robotization on libraries and librarians.