Course of the examination: The defence started with the student presenting the general nature of their dissertation (research question, methodology, literature review and gap, the main findings, and how these findings fit within the field). The floor was then given to the supervisor and reviewer to discuss the reviews. The former outlined some lack of depth for the analysis/conclusion, and the non-institutional formatting of the work. Follow-up questions were asked about how new confucianism fits into the thesis and its importance, and other comments from the opponent for the student to answer. The committee was satisfied with the answers provided by the student and appreciated the overall contribution of the work.
