

The nearest neighbor representation is a new representation of Boolean functions, introduced by Hajnal, Liu, and Turán. In this thesis, its properties within knowledge compilation are examined. In particular, results on its succinctness are shown, and some questions on the hardness of answering queries and performing transformations are answered.