Course of the examination: Reviews propose A, B and C with B as an average grade. The dissertation's main problem is not the quality but certain disproportion between methodological section and the rest of the paper which the reviewers understand as a sort of a "method-centric" approach or the poor or weak contextualization. This disproportion is influenced by the fact that paper mixed two methodological patterns and the student did not have capacity to elaborate on other issues in the same way. It does not mean that the paper is bad, but it's visible, that explanations, debate and interpretations were lagging behind the results provided by methodological tools. Additional questions were answered correctly hence the final grade is B.

Result of defence: excellent (B)
