Geriatric problems in pastoral care

(The precondition of Christian ethics in care of the old people)

Geriatric problems have become an urgent appeal to the present Christian theology and this study wants to relate Christian values to the all dimensions of human life. Pastoral care proposes an approach that integrates biological, psychological, and social changes with existential, spiritual, and value changes.

This approach thus calls attention to such gerontological phenomena as the dignity, altruistic love, empathy, and compassionate concern, because that it is impossible to overcome the current ethical relativism without those values.
