

Abstract

The following pages will note on the making profession in the football between the years 1918 and 1938, in the area of Central bohemian county. From the geographical point of view shows special emphasis on Prague and its surroundings. The economic aspects of the most popular team sport during First republic went through a significant changes thanks to the fame of the sport. From the economical point of view its strength went up thanks to an increase of popularity of supporters that came through to watch the games. The club environment followed a similar path, where the expansion of football teams was manifested in several ways and the headquarters were professionalized, but the development was not proportional. There were also changes in the institutional and organisational form of top bodies, whether it was the Czechoslovak football association, Central bohemian county or structural development of the top competition. The first landmark could be considered the creation of professionalism in the year 1925 and equally important factors were also the finishing touches of the national league.
