Exam questions

Grade

Perhaps the missing link of the thesis is to know more about which has been (so far) the real impact of the narratives and framing deployed by the media both in France and in the UK not only in terms of shaping the national public opinion (here some data in the thesis would have been very nice) but also on actual political decisions adopted behind the analysed cases. Therefore, it would be nice to know more about the actual decisions adopted in one or other direction.

5

To what extent do you think that by analyzing ONLY written press (both in the UK and France) has had an impact in the narratives and the framing you have found about the 'ISIS brides or failed citizens'? In other words, considering that in each country there are a number of media cultures do you think that your findings only concern the written press or could be extended to other media cultures in those two countries? Of course this has substantive implications for your research.

4,5

Can you discuss a hypothetical situation in which the two ISIS bride 'cases' under study were flipped - would the media framing and policy outcomes still be the same?
