

The bachelor work target entitled „The Nurse Casuistry At a Drug Addicted Client“ is to introduce readers both the drug addiction problem and the difficulties which have to be battled in the addiction therapy as well as in their personal lives by the concerning people. The reason why the pursuit has been written in the casuistry form with the clinical introduction to the problem is a better description of all the complicated situation the addicted people inhere in. The clinical part in the first segment has been focused on addictive drugs in themselves. The second one describes the particular reliance as well as it outlines the possibilities of the therapy offered to such users afflicted in this way who have decided to change their present live styles. The last but not least, the prevention has been pursued in the clinical part – the primary prevention all above because it involves the widest population spectrum and its purpose is the smallest number of addicted people, mainly children. The empirical part represents the nurse process at the concrete client curing his heroine addiction in an unnamed curative community. It includes both the medical and the nurse sections. The medical section has been focused on the diagnostics and the method of therapy. The nurse one deals with the client needs and their satisfying and finally, the major nurse diagnostics and their solving.