

In the paper with name: “ Evaluation of postoperative prevention the surgical site infection in nursing care“, I am concerning to questions of prevention of the infection on surgical site infection from surgical care nurse point of view. The paper has research characteristics with an aim to find a level of knowledge and profession skills of surgical care nurses on the field of postoperative care focused to surgical wounds and their influence to development of infection in surgical wound.

Theoretical part is concerned beside clinical aspects of the questions as is an infection distribution on surgical site infection, hazards factors of its development, early diagnostics, correct treatment, but also it is focused to possibilities of quality postoperative care increasing: prevention of surgical wounds infection in practice, hygienic – antiepidemic’s mode, standardization of nursing care procedures, professional preparing of surgical care nurses and good personal management.

The aim of the practical part is to obtain a preview about quality of postoperative care concerning to postoperative prevention of an infection on surgical site infection from surgical care nurse point of view. Part of the paper is also a retrospective research of infectious complications of operative surgical wounds on the relevant working station. On the base of obtained information we can to do information for increasing of quality prevention focused to preventive measures of surgical wounds infection in generally and on the monitored post-operation departments.