

Alzheimer's disease causes a disturbance at the client's cognitive function, activities of daily living and behavioral changes. Thus the affected client gradually becomes totally dependent on the help of another person. Professional nursing care for clients with Alzheimer's disease must be provided in a comprehensive, focusing on areas where self-care client fails. Care is very demanding and requires high expertise, professionalism and empathy for all members of the caring team.