

Since the sixties of the last century in the developed world begins to discover a new approach to health care, which tries to reflect meaningful statistical data on causes of morbidity and premature deaths, along with new scientific representations of the relationships between different factors and their implications for the health condition of an individual.