

Abstract

The aim of this work is the evaluation of extemporaneously prepared metronidazole-containing suppositories. Content uniformity, dispersion of the active ingredient, and the content in relation to the declared one was examined. The content of the active ingredient was determined by means of DSC. The preparations complied with the test of content uniformity. The content of the active ingredient was lower than the declared one.