

Abstract

In this thesis is described electronic order for payment procedure at the district court. Thesis is divided into six chapters. It begins with a history. The main body of the thesis deals with a legal analysis of the electronic order for payment procedure at a district court. It involves the beginning of the procedure, conditions of procedure, delivery, correction tools, and finally, enforcement. It points at deficiency in legal regulations which makes the interpretation of law problematic. In addition, there can be found a comparative study with a German legal system and European order for payment is also mentioned.