

ABSTRACT

The thesis is focused on the specifics of care for women with postpartum bleeding in intensive care. Part of this work are two segments, theoretical and empirical.

The first segment focuses on the theoretical part, which lists the existing knowledge from literature approaching the issue of bleeding complications accompanying childbirth, especially postpartum period, when the lack of timely solution can endanger the woman's life. This section defines the terms postpartum bleeding, hemorrhagic shock, DIC, intensive care and severe postpartum bleeding complications. The work also focuses on nursing care for women with postpartum bleeding. The theoretical part is concluded postoperative nursing care.

The second segment of the work is of empirical character. The main objective of this thesis was to investigate how the care provided to the ARO / ICU for women with problems postpartum bleeding. This part of the non-standardized using an anonymous questionnaire identifies issues of bleeding complications in postpartum period. The work deals with the level of care provided in intensive care for women with severe postpartum bleeding complications, knowledge of the healthcare paramedical personnel in the care of patients with postpartum bleeding and acquiring new information on nursing care in case postpartum bleeding. Other objectives of the study was to determine whether the length of service of employees affect their knowledge, and if the level of educational attainment affect the level of knowledge about postpartum bleeding.

By evaluating the data obtained from the survey revealed the following results. Knowledge of paramedical staff on the issue of postpartum bleeding complications are at a good level. In comparison in relation to the length of healthcare workers and their acquired knowledge was found a significant difference. Their level of education has a significant impact on the level of knowledge about postpartum bleeding. Paramedical staff acquire new knowledge about treatment and nursing care postpartum bleeding most of the seminars and the Internet, as well as from literature. More than half of health professionals about new developments in the treatment of bleeding postpartum care.

Key words: postpartum bleeding, hemorrhagic shock, DIC, intensive care