

This thesis is dealing with types of discourse of the Treadmill of production, that are used by Czech confederation of trade unions. In the first part of the text is the description of the theory of the Treadmill of Production and of the roles of the three actors of the so called growth coalition, which are Labour, Capital and State. In the following part of my work I defined three types of discourse of the Treadmill of Production. The first two are dominant and I named them Competition discourse and Solidarity discourse. They both support the Treadmill of production. The third discourse uses less, it is called Revolution discourse and is used to oppose the Treadmill of production. Those three types of discourse are applied in topics of the flexibilization of work, the technological change, and the environment.
