

This bachelor thesis „Supported employment as an instrument of improving the quality of life of people disadvantaged in the labor market“ deals with possibility of using supported employment for improving the quality of life of people disadvantaged in the labour market. The aim of the thesis is to point out the importance of supporting the employment of disadvantaged people not only for them, but for the whole society. The first part of the thesis focuses on facts about quality of life, employment and unemployment, social and vocational rehabilitation and approaches the provision of the supported employment. There is casuistry in the second part, which helps me to present usefulness of supported employment for improving the quality of life of disadvantaged people, by extension, the entire society.
