

The topic of his thesis emotional violence against children, I chose

Through his interest in this issue.

In the practice scout leader, I had the opportunity to meet and work with a child who has suffered emotional violence as part of their divorce parents. It left a deep impression. Working with this child was uneasy, had problems to fit into a peer group, make new friends, had a significant tendency to seek solitude, was very sensitive and at school should merit problems. I'll never forget how I was talking to him about his problems. Parental divorce took place very rapidly, parents, each other accused and their mutual conflicts was overcast and their child. Later was forced to leave his father, grandparents of his party and all his friends and friends and move with her mother and her new boyfriend on the other end Republic. On top of that you still mother found a new partner with whom the child coming into the everyday conflicts and soon he was born sibling.

It felt that the marginalized and unloved. My father also found time for a new partner, gave birth to their child, and no longer associate with him completely.

With my experience, I had the opportunity to verify that the emotional violence the child leaves deep psychological clues. I decided, therefore, to pursue this issue further.
