

Abstract

Title: Dynamics and structure of interpersonal relationships of FbŠ Bohemians

Objectives: The main goal of this thesis is to chart out the relationships and social ties in the women's extra-lique team of FbŠ Bohemians. To create a player profile, find out how communication works, whether there is enough morale, presence of disparate groups and what are the causes of problems inside the team. Subsequent processing of information should provide a suggestion of how to improve the team situation and help to improve results in the highest female floorball competition.

Methods: The main part of this thesis is done by using the quantitative method, which is a questionnaire survey. The qualitative method used in this thesis is semi-structured interview.

Results: Results of the thesis clearly point to lack of communication. There is also a problem with disparate groups even though the team's cohesiveness is high. We managed to find 5 players, which are being seen as informal leaders and the coach should be working with them. There are also many factors that distort morality and it will be necessary to eliminate them in the future. In the present time the coach is considered as "just a coach" and for most of players his personality is not major essential. This marks that in the future he should work to improve his approach as well..

Key words: Social role, sociology, team performance, floorball, sport psychology